

In an effort to meet international obligations to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, the Federal Government has passed a law, effective from 1st April 2001, which requires electrical retailers to source a certain percentage of their electricity from renewable energy sources. The Renewable Energy (Electrical) Act 2000 allows the owners of solar water heaters to create Renewable Energy Certificates - RECs, which can be sold to others, including electrical retailers, in order to meet their target under the Act. In 2011 this scheme has been split into two categories small scale technology certificates (STCs) and large scale technology certificates (LGCs).
